The Negro Question.

In a recent interview with a correspondent of the New York Tribune on the subject of the proposed union of the Northern and Southern Associations of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Bullock, formerly of this city, said: "The Southern Assembly holds that the Scriptures are the sufficient and sole statute book of the church. It was a departure from this view that led to the division of the church in 1861. The Southern church has now its own autonomy, and many think it would not be wise to place our endowments, seminaries, colleges and churches in the hands of a body which feels at liberty to make political deliverances and to handle secular matters. We have perfect confidence in the integrity, orthodoxy and piety of our northern brethren, but times of excitement may come again, and our only safeguard will be in the strict interpretation of the spirituality of the church. Another serious difficulty in the way is the opposition of the Southern Presbyterians to mixed churches of whites and blacks. This question can never be any serious menace to the peace, prosperity and social life of the northern people, or in the southern States where the white population greatly preponderates; but in some of the southern communities the superior numbers of the colored people would give them the constitutional control of the church, if organized on the principle of a mixed church, which would be followed by a certain amount of social mixture, and then in the lapse of time by mis-generation with its debasing consequences. The great body of Southern Presbyterians are unwilling to place our relations to the negro race in the hands of our northern brethren.

"I have felt a great interest in the negro race all my life. I have been their counsellor and trusted friend. In former years, during the days of slavery in my native State of Kentucky, I looked upon them as wards of their Christian masters. No class of men has done more for them than Southern Presbyterians; they have been and are their best friends and wisest advisers. In connection with other Christian churches in the south they have been instrumental in the conversion of thousands of them to Christianity, and in improving their condition. Up to the period of the civil war and during the war the most friendly relations existed between the two races, and especially between Christian masters and their servants. They willingly attended the preaching of white ministers, and received the gospel without prejudice at their hands. It was my habit to preach to them at sated times, and always to large congregations. I have also preached to them in Baltimore, Alexandria and in Washington. I have always felt the deepest interest in their temporal and spiritual welfare.

"As an evidence of their confidence in me I held the relation of master of two colored ministers in Lexington, Ky., by their own request. Frederick Brayton, a man of unusual strength of mind and of irrefragable character, was the pastor of a colored Baptist church of between two and three thousand members, and received from them a good salary. The celebrated abolitionist, Gerrit Smith, visited his church, and wrote a long and interesting account of him to the New York Observer. Brayton urged me to stand in the relation of his master. When in 1861 I moved to Baltimore I proposed to him to get one of his Baptist brethren to take my place. He besought me to continue in that relation, assigning as his reason his great confidence in me and his affection. I consented, and remained his master until he was made free by the emancipation proclamation by President Lincoln. Until the day of his death he considered me his best friend.

"When I removed to Baltimore the Rev.
Mr. Revell, who was then the pastor of the Madison Street Colored Church, and a man of excellent sense and unblemished character, requested me to teach him one hour in the week. He gave his reason for coming to me as his instructor that he felt more at ease with me, as I was a southern man, and had always lived among colored people; that I knew them better, and he could approach me without embarrassment. I taught him until he left the city, and frequently preached for him. He was the first colored Senator in the Congress of the United States. I mention these things to show that I know whereof I affirm, and that I have been the life-long friend of the colored race. I am sorry to say that a sad change has taken place in these last years in the relations of the two races in the South. By some malign influence they are now dis-inclined to hearken to the advice of their white friends. A new generation has sprung up who are not bound by the ties of love and gratitude to those who raised and, in a measure, educated them.

"The Southern Presbyterians have not lost our interest in them. Our heart's desire and prayer to God is that they may be enlightened to know the truth and be saved.
If our Northern brethren can reach them and do them good, we say to them God speed. We are willing to co-operate with them in every practical way. We wish to say nothing about the political situation. It would be well if our Northern brethren could be brought to feel that we have as deep an interest in the welfare of the negroes as they have. I might truthfully say a deeper interest, as we have always lived among them, and we know them better.
Demagogues have done them a great injury by flattering their vanity and holding out expectations of political promotion, turning their heads towards politics instead of influencing them to habits of industry, economy and sobriety."
